ciety Adopts Formal Protest to Congress Against Passage of Bursum Bill

Urging that all possible pressure be brought to hear upon Congress, Mrs. Elsie Clews Parsons brought forward a resolution of formal protest against the passage of the Bursum act, at the meeting of the American Ethnological Society held at the Museum of Natural History last night. The Bursum act, affecting the dispossession of the Pueblo Indians from lands which have been egally theirs since 1689, was denounced by Mrs. Parsons as inequitable, oppressive and flagrant. Mrs. Parsons declared that while it was unusual for a scientific society to take action on political questions, yet this "threatened injustice" to the 8,000 highly civilized and law abiding Pueblo Indians of New Mexico was so invidious as to warrant that tradition should be disregarded.

These Indians, Mrs. Parsons said, had held ancient and unquestioned title to the lands surrounding their nyables.

These Indians, Mrs. Parsons said, had held ancient and unquestioned title to the lands surrounding their pueblos, granted to them by the Spanish government and confirmed by the Mexican Republic. When New Mexico was ceded to the United States by the terms of the peace treaty following the war of 1848, the American government undertook to observe these titles and Mexican, have occupied the lands right fully belonging to the Indians, and the Bursum bill would grant to these aquatters clear title. By the terms of the bill, said Mrs. Parsons, the squatter need only certify that he has occupied the land for a certain period of time. He will not have to show that he has purchased it from its rightful owners, nor produce deeds of any kind. If he but comply with its one simple provision, the bill is mandatory upon the courts to establish him in possession.

The Bursum bill already has been passed by the Senate and is now in committee in the House waiting to be reported. Senate Borah, Mrs. Parsons declared, had signified his intention, however, of moving that the Senate recall the bill for reconsideration.
